Gates of Tears: The Holocaust in the Lublin District David Silberklang

This book examines the Shoah in the Lublin District. Its analysis traces forced population movements and forced labor, constants in German policy, the bitter early memory of which influenced Jews later actions. Many hid or fled the deportations to death camps and forced labor, fearing an extreme return of the earlier experience, unable to grasp the Final Solution. Lublin was a contradictory district - few ghettos yet little survival.
