This is a must read for any parent whose child is suffering from a specific phobia and is struggling through daily life. This true story brings you inside the life of a mother who struggled to save her daughter from a lonely and debilitating battle with emetophobia and anxiety. Emetophobia, an irrational fear of vomit, is listed as one of the top five most common phobias. It receives little attention compared to other irrational fears, and trying to treat it can be quite difficult. With her daughter losing weight daily and refusing to even leave the house, she knew she needed more than weekly therapy. Exposure Therapy was their last hope for help. The only way to save her daughter was to make her face her greatest fear.
