Training Practitioner Adjuncts: A Workbook for Increasing Educator Effectiveness Paul C. Jackson, Peggy M. Jackson

This workbook presents a user-friendly model for a practitioner adjunct faculty development program. Now, higher-education institutions can help these important members of the higher-education faculty become more effective educators. The comprehensive Jackson Model© for Practitioner Adjunct Faculty Development:

- Describes what should be included in a faculty development program for practitioner adjuncts
- Is set up so institutions can use some or all components
- Includes a discovery element designed for institutions to match training with their specific needs
- Contains an evaluation section to measure the effectiveness of the training and ensure a case can be made for the value of the program

This faculty development model provides higher-education institutions with a complete training package to get new faculty off to the best possible start in their academic careers and, ultimately, improve student success.
