Dreams From Our Founding Fathers: First Principles in the Age of Obama Ron DeSantis

The Age of Obama has sparked widespread public discontent, the formation of tea parties, and a renewed emphasis on the philosophy of the Founding Fathers. Dreams From Our Founding Fathers: First Principles in the Age of Obama shows why so many Americans have turned to the nation's founding principles in response to Barack Obama's self-described transformational change agenda. Using critical primary sources like the debates at the Constitutional Convention and The Federalist Papers, Ron DeSantis identifies the important principles that the Founders relied upon when they created the Constitution and demonstrates how Obama and his allies have radically departed from them. On issue after issue the scope of government, the redistribution of wealth, the role of the courts, political leadership, and foreign affairs, among others Obama has chartered a course that is alien to the Republic's philosophical foundations. America is at a constitutional crossroads. Obama's vision rests heavily on progressive thought and the plethora of left-of-center political influences that have informed his worldview, and portends a decidedly less exceptional America, an America more akin to governments throughout Europe, in which the state, rather than the individual, is supreme. Such a vision is a far cry from the dreams bequeathed to us by the Founding Fathers, who created a constitution based on enduring truths about individual liberty and the role of government. The voters choice between these competing visions will define the national character for a generation and, perhaps, irrevocably. Alexander Hamilton's observation in The Federalist No. 1, regarding the state of affairs in his time, is equally apt to our time: The crisis at which we are arrived may with propriety be regarded as the era in which that decision is to be made; and a wrong election of the part we shall act may, in this view, deserve to be considered as the general misfortune of mankind.
